Dr. Kjell A Nordstrom, advisor to multi-national corporations and well known economist and Per Schlingmann, leading advisor in the fields of communications and management, decided to let their worldviews meet. They gazed into their crystal ball to see what the near future holds for the human race and civilisation, and they saw a silent revolution, spear-headed by cities and women. The result of their meeting is the book Urban Express.

I was immediately captivated by the well-written, frenetic prose. As if it's been written with internet-style speed. I think I imbibed the whole book with a smile on my lips. Maybe because it confirms some lines of thinking I and many people around me have, and maybe it will also make it easier for me to carry them forward and get them heard in my leadership. There's loads to take in in this book.
